Liev Schreiber's "Everything Is Illuminated", adapted from the best-selling novel of the same title by Jonathan Safran Foer, is a brilliant picture contemplating the meaning of heritage and history and the glow of understanding that embracing the past casts onto the present. The film suggests that even the darkest page of history can be bathed in the warmth of consoling, self-congratulatory sentiment. Taking place in Ukraine, "Everything is Illuminated" is a gentle comedy of understanding and forgiveness played in the shadow of the Holocaust. Enjoy fantastic music, beautiful views, bright characters and a movie that won't leave you indifferent.

(The film is in English and Russian, with English subtitles.)
